I've started a Go Fund Me campaign for getting the 4000 (NON-CR) Rev B reverse engineered. All project files will be open and public. The cost for this being done by a US company is not cheap but also very fair for what we get in return. Please take a look at the page here and help if you can!

Despite almost nothing sensible being done with it, all the legal rights for "Amiga", "Commodore", and all associated properties (including the old machines) are already owned by someone else, although it's almost anyone's guess who owns what thanks to changing hands and being split up so many times.

A "replica" is also rather pretty pointless ... even more pointless if it's one of those silly "mini" versions of old tech that seem to be a current fad.
