I just saw the search for Spock. Boy, what a movie. However, It brings up some questions that were about to die on the net. In particular, the cloaking device. It plays an important role, and apparently Kirk is the only one in all of Starfleet command to expect that anyone might use it. It is detectable by sensors, even if just as a distortion of space around it (but their computer should have been able to analyze it if properly instructed.) Thus one can only conclude that The use of a powerful defense like the cloaking device was not well known to the rest of the fleet. Kirk, of course picks it up right away. Anyway, the fact that the device was efectivly used blows away a lot of the arguments recently used on the net. Oh yah, does a vulcan Bird of Prey really only have twelve people? There are a bunch more questions, but I'll wait with those.

It does seem odd that if Kirk could see the distortion produced by the Cloaking device that Star Fleet would not have all the ships computers programmed to test and enhance the distortion area. They had a working device to play with and that could have saved the Grissom.

They said that there were twelve Klingons on the Scout Ship but I could only remember seeing eleven. Does anyone know what happened to the last one? I can account for:

(6) Beamed over to the Enterprise

(3) Beamed down to the Planet

One was blasted by Kirk

One was used by Spock to set a new outdoor Klingon Toss Record

One (Krudge) was dropped into the lava river. (Since the effects were done by IL+M this was probably the same lava that was used in Indiana Jones and the Banquet of doom)

On the ship one was blasted for being too good of a shot (" But they said that Klingons don't take prisoners")

One (Maltz) was captured

If anyone can account for the last one then please let me know.

He was asleep in his bunk when they took over. We expect him to wake up in the ST IV and raise one hell of a stink. :-)

Well, wait a minute. Who said there were 12 and when was it said. I don't quite remember. I have a feeling that there might really have been only 11 after whasisname got nuked. I'm not sure and maybe I have my numbers off...I have to go see it again.
