This season's gone so wrong it's somehow retroactively gone back and ruined the first couple rounds of NCAA basketball when I was doing pretty well. Also one of the book shelves is falling apart, although that's going to not be my concern much longer.

If I don't reply to this Joseph Nebus post, the terrorists win.

I've got my national champion still in. And that's it. I lost half my Final Four by the Sweet 16.

I know, thanks to MSU, even my huge head start on points didn't save me from losing the lead in our tourney this weekend. This is what I get for being true to my school!

Don't worry, Heather. I'm true to my school, too.

Only my school is Kentucky, so this year it works out. We won't talk about last year.

I actually picked two Final Four teams correctly this year. I think that's a record for me.

Anywho, it's up and down and I certainly hope you return to the group next year!

Here's where I have the advantage. Since I went to schools that have no self-esteem, there's no need to stay loyal to them in picking sports championships. As they say, nobody ever died for dear old Rutgers, and nobody expects Rutgers alumni to follow the Scarlet Knights into a deep and astounding mediocrity.

Buy a tube of "LIQUID NAILS" (with a screw-on top).
Unscrew your screws, dip screw ends in Liquid Nails, screw back together.
Tidy up with nasal tissue or a bit of toilet paper.

When dry, reload shelves.
It is the easiest way to turn pressed fiberboard into tolerable solidity on a budget.
Normal pressed fiberboard, with a bit of jostling after assembly, will loosen up the screw holes and begin to fall apart. Ideally you will want to soak the cheap pressed fiberboard bookshelves with polyurethane sealant or polyurethane varnish (this will cause the cheap printed laminate to peel off, but you should chemically improve any cheap pressed fiberboard furniture and let air dry as the cost is an extra $10, but the payoff is long-term durability versus the costs of higher quality hardwood furniture.

Woot! Break out the champagne!

After finishing at the bottom so many years, it's nice to finally be at the top.

Thanks to everyone who participated - next year in Atlanta!

Ah, my reign as marginally not incompetent was fun while it lasted. (This is also something I say at work often.) Thanks for running the game.
