

---

Subject: Re: Is LINUX the inheritor of the Earth?
Posted by scott on Mon, 10 Dec 2018 19:05:17 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

maus <mausg@mail.com> writes:
> On 2018-12-10, Scott Lurndal <scott@slp53.sl.home> wrote:
>> Huge <Huge@nowhere.much.invalid> writes:
>>> On 2018-12-10, Huge <Huge@nowhere.much.invalid> wrote:
>>>> On 2018-12-10, Ahem A Rivet's Shot <steveo@eircom.net> wrote:
>>>> > On 10 Dec 2018 10:46:02 GMT
>>>> > Huge <Huge@nowhere.much.invalid> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> [37 lines snipped]
>>>>
>>>> >> In the UK, the economic case [for solar PV] simply isn't convincing enough.
>>>> >
>>>> > For some it clearly is.
>>>>
>>>> And they're welcome to it. I'll wait until there's a lot less hand-have, y, >>>> thanks.
>>>
>>> Pioneers end up face down in the dirt with arrows in their backs.
>>>
>>> (Did Andy(?) install his own panels? If so, did he factor in the cost >>> of his own labour? I'd wager yes and no, respectively.)
>>
>> There's not a whole lot of labor involved, really. Took about 6 hours >> from driving up in the truck to flipping the breaker connecting the system to the >> grid.
>>
>
> Until the next windy day.

What does a windy day have to do with rooftop solar installation?

> I know places in the mountains where the > sun only rises about 11 in the morning, and sets about two.

Which appear not to be good sites for solar, if that's the case year-around.

---