NNNnnnnnoooooooooo....!!!! :o(

It's being reported all over the place that "Star Wars" creator George Lucas has sold everything to Disney - all of his various companies (LucasFilm, ILM, Skywalker Sound, LucasArts, etc.) and the entire Star Wars franchise.

I can only guess that George Lucas was disappointed by the rather lacklustre reception to the (frankly pointless and hopeless) 3D-erised release of Episode I.

It remains to be seen what this means for the Clone Wars animated TV show, the planned live-action TV show, the fifth Indiana Jones movies, and everything else ... but the over-egoed, money-grubbers are already planning a rushed, ill-fitting "Episode 7" movie (over-seen by Lucas) to be released in 2015, followed by new Episode 8 and 9 movies every two years. Another great franchise destroyed by Hollyweird. :o(

Disney's purchase of Lucasfilms today for $4 billion will likely mean more "Star Wars" TV projects, says Disney CEO Bob Iger. "We really like Star Wars' potential on TV, and Disney XD would be a great home for that," he says.

Translation:

"We really like Star Wars' potential to make us lots and lots of cash, and we don't give a crap about the existing fans, the established franchise, nor anything else," says Disney CEO Bob Iger.

It will be harder to say "Disney ruined my childhood" rather than "Lucas ruined my childhood" by those who need to get a life.

You obviously haven't seen the 3D CGI versions of Mickey Mouse and Winnie the Pooh? ;-)

What kind of "Star Wars" TV shows will Disney develop?:
<http://tvline.com/2012/11/01/star-wars-tv-series/>

Now that Disney owns the "Star Wars" franchise, will we see a lot of "Star Wars" TV shows — including the long-rumored live TV adaptation?

Disney seem to have massive plans for Star Wars. They're already talking about about a new Trilogy and possibly more movies, more TV shows, more merchandise, moving the comic books to Marvel (once Dark Horse's contract runs out), more integration with their theme parks, etc., etc.

They'll resurrect "From All of Us, To All of You", and bump some classic animation segment for a snippet from Star Wars.

I'd bet on a cartoon starring C3PO and R2D2, and probably that monumnetally annoying creature from the fourth actual episode whose name, thank heaven, escapes me.

It's Disney, so I expect Star Wars Chapter 7: Rescue from The Black Hole.

They'd better start working on this one pretty soon. Yvette's getting old, and Perkins is dead.

No, the really "annoying creature" ... little Ani Skywalker. ;-)

Have you seen John Carter?? ;-)

It depends on who they get to do the new movies (and reportedly the new woman has said "two to three movies PER YEAR"! ) and if they actually stick to the facts and style already established by George Lucas.
