Any lurkers peeking in here have any thoughts? I have not seen it yet, but I am definitely going to. It is a number of dreams come true.

A good story about life in the world of video games (plural).

Respect for old school video games when creativity was high.

The return of Buckner and Garcia.

On this last, a sad note. Gary Garcia was initially in on the project, but passed away before they made it into the studio. The rest of the original band is there save the drummer, who was lost a few years back. And all agreed to credit the song as Buckner and Garcia even with Gary's passing.

On a positive note, I have heard portions of their big hit, Pack Man Fever, get airplay in reference to Wreck It Ralph twice now.

So is there anyone else around this forum at all, and if so, do you have any thoughts on the movie or related?

I've heard good reviews on it. I might go see it myself.

I saw it yesterday. For an old school / classic gamer, this movie is terrific! Plenty of subtle references as well as the known ones. And the story has several twists to it, it has not been spelled out in the publicity. And for all the publicity, there is still a lot of laughs not yet shown. It is a very good movie.

And do yourself a favor, stay to the very end of the credits. My family was the only people who stuck around to the very end, and it was worth it. Something any arcade game collector will appreciate.

I finally saw it a couple weeks after it opened. I think I was too wrapped up in wondering if my speculation on the plot was correct to truly just enjoy it. I must say, though, that I was surprised by the villain reveal, then kicked myself for not seeing it coming.

Can't wait for the home release so I can watch that time lapse arcade sequence in slow motion and spot *all* the games.
