Hello. As you all know by now, unless you were in a cave someplace, I have become the new owner of the "8-Bit Designs" lines of products and services.

After some heartfelt "SOUL SEARCHING" I have decided to relinquish the rights to the "POWER PRO 250" power supplies, and "THE ULTIMATE GAMEPAD."

I will be taking "OFFERS" from all parties starting today.

These "RIGHTS" come with all diagrams, prototypes, users guides, instructional cd videos (Power Pro 250), a contract of transfer of ownership and a NON-COMPETE AGREEMENT, and a few miscellaneous parts and supplies to help you get started on your way.

ALL OTHER DESIGNS WILL REMAIN IN MY POSSESSION!!!!!! So please DON'T ASK!!!!!!

Thanks for supporting 8-Bit Designs and we look forward to working with you all.

I'm not sure, because I was in a cave these last few months.... but I think he had a few capital letters and quotation marks left over from his last production run.

Or, maybe these two items were not the high-volume items that he hoped they'd be. Or they're too time-consuming to assemble, versus the profit earned from them.

Personally, I'd like to see the group band together and buy the rights to all of the 8-Bit line, and then release the designs to the public. Joe over at Star Commander could contract out production in Hungary or wherever for a lot less than what it would cost to build them here, and then we can buy the finished product for what the materials alone cost here in the States.

Problem #1 with Ultimate GamePad, the specific type of PlayStation controller with the 8-Directional D-Pad from interact is NO LONGER in production or hard to find as new pads and would require some more R&D with another vendor's gamepad with similar specs.

I already had seen and researched this some. Most of the pads have 4-directional D-Pads which kinda messes up part of the new combinations and limits the function and combination options that one would have hoped for in the specs.

However, I would personally acquire the Ultimate GamePad i.p. for the right amount. He should also consider value depreciation of intellectual property and not demand a huge amount for the i.p. Since it was $4000 for the whole 8-Bit Designs i.p. (I know for a fact. $1000 for the domain).

Since the items have not been produced for a few years, I would suspect the i.p. to be relatively small and it is only one item not the 'whole business'.

I would be kind to the C= community regarding the item. Personally, I am not interested in the Power Supply. However, he should simply release the two item's specs to public domain or at least the info publically and only retain the rights and royalty negotiations can be made but should be small.

Why make a business out of those items?

Anyone with a brain would have to redo the R&D on the gamepad to get that going again.

Is this the Power Pro 250 power supply and what are the specs?

<http://members.shaw.ca/commvex05/target4.html>

and where are the specs/info/pics on the gamepad?

What the hell are you selling???

Thyat's the one on the gold 128 from CommVex, It powers the whole setup (128 2 1571s, etc.) with some spare 1541-II, 1581 drive power connectors to spare IIRC.

Looks like a modified AT/ATX power supply. 250W is plenty to power all those C= devices and more but it's pretty light for a PC supply.

I used a self-modified AT supply to power my A500 and drives and it worked very well.

The thing is, buying the rights to the power pro design is like buying the rights to a cheese sandwich.

There is no magic, its a ps with a 9v transformer and some wires. My mom could make one.

he cant sell any because noone is dumb enough to pay $100 for such a thing. or pay $15 for an extra connector.

Yes, I understand that. You wouldn't need to obtain any "rights" to start producing them anyway as far as I can see (if there was a market for them, which there isn't)

Well, could you get your mom to work on it over this weekend? I've ruined 2 c64's with a bad PS and I don't even have one for my 128.

Well, HAHAHA, actually it's a tad bit more complicated than just a transformer, but funny nevertheless...

Anyways, the offer still stands on the table for someone that might want to spend the time and money manufacturing them.

The "rights" come with a whole barrage of benefits (which I will not list here at the moment). For a listing of the "benefits" that come with the rights, please feel free to email me and I will be more than happy to oblige.

Funny thing bout that as well. The Website is actually already completed in my mind as per the designs. It just needs to be put onto a disk and uploaded onto the domain name (and this will not happen until I sell off the rights and products to the Power Pro and the Gamepad and all transfers are fully completed).

Well, usually it still have to be coded unless you have it already completed as per the code in your mind. But even then putting that code on the disk might still raise a couple of technical issues as per our today's knowledge on the methods of transferring mind patterns from organic, cellular media to the magnetic storage. Why not upload it directly, bypassing the disk storage then? ;-)

Paul Panks should be able to help with getting the mind patterns onto the floppies.

He's had some practice.

IOW never. Look Charles, you don't have any particular rights to your products and the "rights" you claim to be selling have no real commercial value. I could simply buy the gamepad and power supply (or design my own) and put the designs on my website and there wouldn't be a damn thing you could do about it.

In fact, if I were you that is exactly what I would be doing anyway, that is make publically available and give something back to the community for free.

Oh, and your excuses as to why you don't have a website are getting old. There are simply no reasons why you shouldn't have a web presence of some sorts in this day and age, none at all.

All the tools and sites to do it are available for free and easy to use and webspace is free and people have offered to help you and still you are making excuses.

The only thing you are selling plenty of is bullshit.

I'll try putting my PIC under my pillow tonight, I'll check tomorrow morning to see if it programmed itself.

If nothing happens, send your PIC to Rick. It should program itself under his pillow. ;-)

If you don't pay your exorcist, will you become repossessed?

Given the level of business-savvyness you display in here I wouldn't be so sure.

There is no patents on them. No trademarks were filed. Go check it up at <http://www.uspto.gov> US Patents and Trademarks Office... They do have an online database for this shit.

Michael Hunter did not spend the thousands of dollars it would take to patent his designs and file the trademarks and file the copyrights. The only thing legit is copyright as it is protected immediately by putting a copyright notice on a program created and of course published.

normal crap.

Michael Hunter was the copyright holder of the programs that he created and thus is now yours IIRC - with probably the exception of the Ultimate Game Pad software and Programming Guide for it. As that would return back to Denard.

Since all IP (copyrights, trademarks, patents, trade secrets, schematics, design instructions, and documentations) pertaining to PowerPro250 and Ultimate GamePad would return to Denard Springle. The stock parts may or may not return back to him, that depends on your deal.

Dragos you are mistaken, the plans for a cheese sandwich would be more valuable than the power pro.
